

School Program

Does the Child Lures School Program have permanence?

Yes. Once a diocese or one of its schools adopts the Child Lures School Program, it becomes a permanent resource that is incorporated into the long-term mission of the diocese. Targeted grades, as well as new students and personnel can be trained each year.

Has the Program been evaluated and proven to work?

Yes. The Child Lures School Program has been scientifically evaluated and shown, based on the federally-mandated "Principles of Effectiveness," to be highly effective in safeguarding youngsters.

The Child Lures School Program is endorsed by the National Associations of Elementary and Secondary School Principals and has been enthusiastically adopted by over 1000 school systems in 43 states.

What do youngsters who participate in the Child Lures School Program learn?

The Child Lures School Program teaches children life skills to protect them from predatory crimes. It gives them the ability to distinguish between appropriate and improper behavior and to recognize potentially dangerous people and situations. It encourages them to treat others with respect and dignity – and to expect to be treated the same.

Is a Student Code of Conduct included?

Yes. Students are asked to sign and commit to a Student Code of Conduct. A full 20% of childhood sexual abuse is perpetrated by children, on children. The Child Lures School Program emphasizes that it is illegal for anyone -even a peer- to cross over the line from affection to sexual abuse. It stresses the importance of reporting all crimes and getting help from trusted adults. The Program also addresses bullying and harassment issues and gives students steps to take to prevent and report these unacceptable behaviors.

How was the Child Lures School Program originally developed?

Arthur and researcher Kenneth Wooden interviewed hundreds of convicted sex offenders to uncover the variety of lures they used to secure victims. A former educator, Wooden combined these lures with proven prevention strategies to develop the Child Lures School Program. Since its creation in 1985, the Program has expanded to include sections on Internet crime, date rape, drug resistance, and bullying & harassment prevention.

Does the Child Lures School Program offer a balanced perspective?

Yes. Youngsters are repeatedly reassured that the vast majority of educators, clergy, and other adults are sincerely committed to the happiness and well-being of children and would not take advantage of them. Those who prey on children are the exception.

Is the Child Lures School Program age-appropriate?

Yes. The Presenter's Instruction Guide contains age-appropriate lesson plans and review activities for elementary and middle/high school students. The program's training video contains highlights from presentations with elementary, middle, and high school students. The presenter is also encouraged to fine-tune each lesson, based on the sophistication and ability of students.
